

NAOSH WEEK

May 1 - 7, 2016

What's Your Reason?

Attend one of Saskatchewan's esteemed luncheons in support of North American Occupational Safety and Health (NAOSH) Week.

Kevin Burns believes when people buy-in to safety and improve their personal leadership in safety, the need for rules enforcement disappears. "The purpose of developing safety leaders is to create more safety leaders. When you create more safety leaders, you reduce the need for compliance enforcement and policing. You create a stronger team, better communication, and greater engagement. You build a strong safety culture."

When employees develop their own personal leadership skills, they make different choices. He helps people choose safety as one of their personal values.

Kevin sees safety as an attitude - a lifestyle choice. You won't find gruesome photos, teary-eyed videos or beaten-to-death slogans in Kevin's presentation. He uses a fresh approach of fun, humour, stories and some life-changing safety leadership strategies.

Kevin makes safety fun, engaging, easily understood and positive, all while aligning with and supporting safety programs. He has worked in management, consulting and corporate safety for almost 30 years. He currently is a speaker, consultant and nine-time author. He has built his reputation on a very simple premise: it's not THAT you talk to your people in safety, it's HOW you talk to your people.
